and FREDERICK JOHN RIZZOLO, )

12 Defendants. )

14 Before the Court is Defendant Frederick Rizzolo’s Motion to Clarify or in the 15 Alternative Reduce Restitution Order (Doc. #506), filed on August 8, 2013. Plaintiff
16 United States of America filed a Response (Doc. #509) on August 23, 2013.
17 Defendant filed a Reply (Doc. #510) on August 28, 2013. Plaintiff United States filed 18 a Supplement (Doc. #512) on November 13, 2013. The Court held a hearing on this 19 matter on November 15, 2013. (Mins. of Proceedings (Doc. #513).)

20 By this Motion, Defendant Rizzolo seeks to eliminate the $4,250,000 forfeiture
21 imposed as part of his sentence, arguing that upon substitution of the Crazy Horse 22 Too, the $4,250,000 forfeiture was satisfied. Alternatively, Rizzolo argues the 23 $4,250,000 forfeiture, restitution in the amount of $1,734,000 owed to the Internal 24 Revenue Service, and assessed fines should be reduced or eliminated because the

27 <sup>1</sup> Defendant Rizzolo also seeks clarification of his restitution obligation. As discussed 28 at the hearing, the parties are working to clarify the restitution amount and will file supplemental briefing if necessary.

1 have changed such that he cannot and will not be able to satisfy his obligations.

2 The United States responds by contending this Court previously has rejected 3 similar arguments by Rizzolo. The Government further argues that it did not waste the 4 asset. Rather, it tried to sell the Crazy Horse Too without success in a declining
5 market after Rizzolo could not sell the property in the year given to him to do so under 6 the plea agreement. Finally, the Government contends Rizzolo has shown a capacity 7 and willingness to divert funds to avoid his obligations, and Rizzolo has the means to 8 earn income to apply toward his obligations. The Government thus contends Rizzolo 9 may have the means to satisfy his obligations in the future.

10 A. Forfeiture

11 Rizzolo's $4,250,000 forfeiture obligation was not satisfied or extinguished 12 through the substitution of the Crazy Horse Too. Rizzolo forfeited $4,250,000, which 13 the parties anticipated would be satisfied through sale of the Crazy Horse Too. When 14 Rizzolo failed to sell the Crazy Horse Too within the year given to him to do so under 15 the plea agreement, the parties agreed to substitute the Crazy Horse Too and the 16 property on which it sits for the United States to sell the property, with the proceeds to 17 be applied to all of Rizzolo's outstanding obligations, including the forfeiture amount.

18 The case upon which Rizzolo relies in his brief is distinguishable. In United 19 States v. Paccione, the Government and the criminal defendants entered into a 20 settlement agreement whereby the defendants would confess judgment in the amount 21 of $22 million in full satisfaction of their forfeiture obligations. 948 F.2d 851, 854-55
22 (2d Cir. 1991). After the defendants defaulted on the required payments under the 23 parties' settlement agreement, the Government sought to substitute assets under the 24 forfeiture statutory scheme. Id. at 854. The Second Circuit held the Government
25 contractually agreed to enforce the parties' settlement agreement through confession 26 of judgment, and thus the Government could not seek to substitute assets under the

1 forfeiture statutory scheme. Id. at 855-56. Rather, the Government was relegated to 2 the remedies of a judgment creditor. Id.<sup>2</sup>

3 Here, in contrast, Rizzolo points to no evidence that the parties contractually
4 agreed that the substitution itself, rather than the sale proceeds, extinguished Rizzolo's 5 forfeiture obligation regardless of what the sale of the substituted asset ultimately 6 yielded. Rather, this Court's substitution Order stated that "the substitute assets shall 7 be sold and applied to defendant . . . Frederick John Rizzolo's forfeiture and 8 restitution obligations . . . ." (Order (Doc. #62).) Defendant Rizzolo did not object to 9 this characterization.

10 Additionally, the First Amended Order of Forfeiture (Doc. #222) identified the 11 $4,250,000 as one of Rizzolo's obligations to be satisfied out of the sale proceeds. In 12 terms of priority, the forfeiture amount was subordinate to over $10 million in other 13 obligations. (Order (Doc. #222) at 8-9.) Thus, it was possible the forfeiture amount 14 would not be satisfied if the sale of the substituted asset did not yield sufficient funds.
15 Rizzolo did not object to the First Amended Order of Forfeiture on the basis that the 16 forfeiture amount had been satisfied upon substitution of the asset regardless of the 17 amount ultimately obtained from the sale of the Crazy Horse Too. The Second 18 Amended Order of Forfeiture (Doc. #242) similarly provided a priority of payment
19 which demonstrates Rizzolo's forfeiture obligation would be satisfied only if the sale
20 of the Crazy Horse Too yielded sufficient funds to cover Rizzolo's forfeiture
21 obligation. Because the ultimate sale of the Crazy Horse Too did not yield sufficient

22
23 <sup>2</sup> At the hearing in this matter, Rizzolo referred to an agreement between the Securities
24 and Exchange Commission and Ivan Boesky which similarly reflects a contractual 25 agreement between the Commission and Boesky by which the transfer of shares in a 26 company would fulfill Boesky's penalty obligations. Rizzolo has not established that 27 the Government agreed in this case that the act of substituting the asset itself satisfied 28 Rizzolo's forfeiture obligation. Rizzolo also referred to United States v. Yeung, but that case involved the calculation of restitution, and does not discuss forfeiture. 672
F.3d 594, 599-602 (9th Cir. 2012).

1 funds to satisfy Rizzolo's $4,250,000 forfeiture obligation, that obligation has not
2 been extinguished merely by operation of the substitution of assets. The Court
3 therefore will deny Rizzolo's Motion to the extent it seeks to have the Court declare 4 the $4,250,000 forfeiture deemed satisfied upon substitution of the Crazy Horse Too.

5 B. Alleged Waste

6 The Court finds no evidentiary basis to reduce the forfeiture, restitution, or 7 fines based on the Government's alleged waste of the substituted asset. As an initial 8 matter, Rizzolo has presented no probative evidence that the value of the Crazy Horse
9 Too was $30 million at the time it was substituted. At the time of substitution, there 10 were offers to purchase the Crazy Horse Too in the $30 million range, but none of the 11 prospective buyers was willing to purchase the property at that price. Fair market 12 value generally is determined by the price a willing buyer would pay a willing seller.
13 See, e.g., Unruh v. Streight, 615 P.2d 247, 249 (Nev. 1980). There were no buyers
14 willing to pay $30 million for the Crazy Horse Too during the year Rizzolo was given 15 to sell the property under the plea agreement, at the time of substitution, or at any time 16 thereafter.

17 Moreover, Rizzolo has not presented any evidence from which this Court could 18 determine how much, if any, a decline in value was due to alleged waste by the 19 Government versus the dramatic decline in property values during the relevant time 20 frame. Rizzolo was unable or unwilling to sell the property during the year given to 21 him under the plea agreement during more favorable market conditions. In contrast, 22 while the Government owned the property, the nation as a whole experienced an 23 economic recession which devastated Las Vegas in particular. The Court has been 24 presented with no evidentiary basis to reduce Rizzolo's obligations by any particular 25 dollar amount based on the Government's inability to sell the Crazy Horse Too during 26 an increasingly declining market.<sup>3</sup> The Court therefore denies Rizzolo's Motion to the

27 _____
28 <sup>3</sup> The case Rizzolo relied upon at the hearing, Fischer v. United States, involved a claim by a criminal defendant that the Government had obtained money from the sale of

1 extent it seeks to reduce his obligations due to alleged Government waste of the 2 substituted asset.

3 C. Changed Circumstances

4 Finally, the Court finds there is no change in circumstances to justify reducing 5 or eliminating Rizzolo's obligations. Rizzolo's prior efforts at concealing assets 6 combined with his ability to earn income weigh against a finding that Rizzolo will 7 have no future ability to pay his obligations. The Court therefore denies Rizzolo's 8 Motion to the extent it seeks to relieve him of his obligations based on an inability to 9 pay in the future.

10 D. Conclusion

11 IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that Defendant Frederick Rizzolo's Motion to 12 Clarify or in the Alternative Reduce Restitution Order (Doc. #506) is hereby DENIED.

forfeited assets in excess of the amount owed on the forfeiture obligation, and thus the Government had to return any excess to him. 96 Fed. Cl. 70, 74, 78 (2011). Here, it is undisputed the proceeds of the sale of the Crazy Horse Too did not cover the original note, much less result in excess proceeds that must be returned to Rizzolo.
